

When I answer my phone these days, I can be fairly certain that the person on the other end is someone I know and want to speak to. The Telephone Privacy law means that I'm not forced to be rude to those people who call into my home, uninvited. I know that's their job, but there is enough annoyance on a day to day basis without having to deal with unwanted sales pitches. My phone number is not given out to just anyone. My home is my private place where I'm entitled to a peaceful existence. The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy laws protections.
